

Children's book author, amateur naturalist, and conservationist Beatrix Potter grew up drawing and painting animals with detail and accuracy. She lived in London for many years, but used income from her children's books to buy Hill Top Farm in England's Lake District. Beatrix bought more land to preserve it and left more than 4,000 acres (including 16 farms and many herds of sheep and cattle) to the National Trust. The land later became part of Lake District National Park.

Beatrix drew and painted.

She was quiet, she was good.

Except when summer came

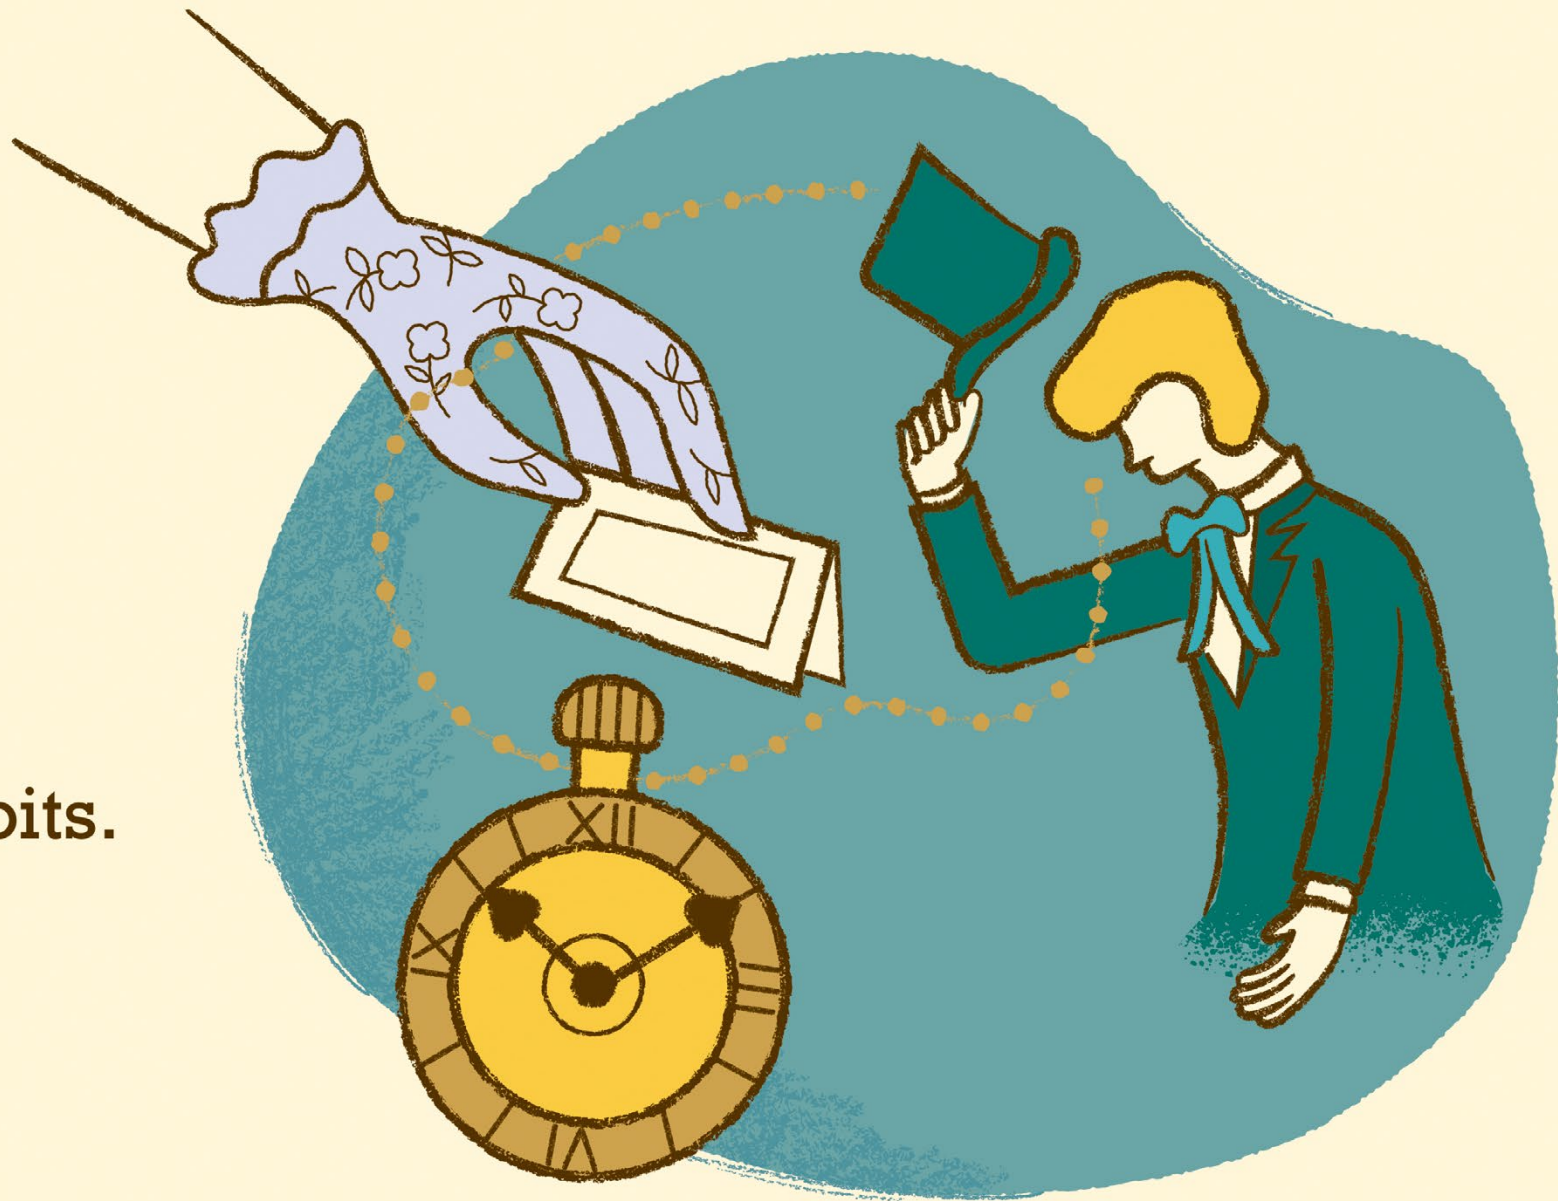

and she ran wild in the wood.

Beatrix grew up with correct Victorian habits.

Except when she studied mushrooms

and wrote stories
about rabbits.
