

Rachel Carson was a marine biologist who wrote three popular books about ocean life. Then she wrote Silent Spring to tell people about the dangers of pesticides, which might kill so many birds that none would be left to sing in the spring. Rachel's work brought about change, and she is considered the mother of the modern environmental movement.

She wrote about the sea.

But something worried Rachel:

What did farmers spray on crops?

And it was bad for people, too.

Rachel spoke—

and people heard.

Now we know how to take good care of fish,

of bees,

of birds that sing.
